

A short introduction and discussion on how information from plant taxonomists or even amateur botanists is utilized in plant conservation, what problems arise from taxonomy itself, but also from the lack of data on plant species biology; also, the issue of massive information, even by amateur botanists, and what consequences this can have on plant conservation.